Whatever the new national curriculum requires when it is finalised in 2012 and 2013, improving participation, engagement and wellbeing will remain priorities for schools. Our recently completed three year research provides evidence from international studies and from in depth research in England about what engages young people with curriculum and secures their active participation. Join us to explore the development of effective learning. Relationships building can be designed into participation and engagement and how specific features of different curriculum areas can be used to promote student wellbeing. Focussing on opportunities for development in your own school, you will explore a range of tools and resources for identifying opportunities for enhancing staff skills and embedding new strategies.

This workshop will:

Help you develop approaches to enhance pupils' wellbeing and engagement in your curriculum area and/or across the curriculum

This workshop is designed for:

Primary and secondary senior and middle leaders, and classroom teachers with a particular interest in improving learner wellbeing and engagement

By the end of the day you will:

- Have extended your knowledge of strategies for engagement and participation and for promoting pupil wellbeing in the classroom
- Take with you evidence-based resources and strategies you could try in your context
- Have the knowledge, skills and tools for involving colleagues in improving engagement and wellbeing in your key context
- Be confident about evaluating the impact of the changes you introduce on your own practice and on your pupils' learning

Be confident of quality:

Your workshop facilitator will be Natalia Buckler, CUREE's Senior Research Manager who led the field work on participation, engagement and wellbeing and who has worked extensively in supporting leaders and teachers in engaging with research as part of their learning.

All CUREE programmes are rooted in the evidence about what really works in classrooms and how teachers learn. We will use interactive activities and powerful tools to encourage deep learning. You will leave equipped to share this with colleagues in school.
